Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from The McBride First School Year: For Catholic Schools The average child on entering school has a vocabulary of several hundred words. These words he is able to use as his ideas call for expression. Reading for him, therefore, should at the beginning have for its object little more than giving him the ability to translate the symbol, viz., the printed or written word into the word which he knows by sound, and which conveys a tolerably clear idea to him. With few exceptions, the reasons for which will be obvious, no attempt is made in this Primer to do much more than to familiarize the child with the symbol for that of which he already knows the sound. The words used are such as may fairly be looked for in the vocabulary of the average child of five or six. The method employed is the word method; or, more properly, a combination of the word and sentence methods. Phonics are not introduced, as the author believes that their study should be taken up only after a fair stock of words has been cognized as wholes, and the child has enjoyed some practice in translating symbol into sound. He will thus have had a taste of the pleasure of reading. As much blackboard work is preliminary to the reading even of the primer, the attempt has been made to render the transition from script to print as easy as possible.
