Excerpt: .or riding, suits is seen to better advantage in Plate 1. Turning our attention to the Commerce and Industries Building before us in Plate 5, we see a structure combining features of Moorish, Spanish Renaissance, Plateresque, and Churrigueresque styles. For instance, the red-tiled roof and widely projecting, richly decorated cornice, supported by stone consoles representing kneeling women who bear the weight on their backs, lends a distinctly Moorish touch to the building. The decoration of the paneling on the under side of this cornice between the consoles, as well as the sculpturing of the spaces between these, corresponding to the metopes of a Grecian order, is elaborate--such work as might be seen on many palaces at Saragossa, Spain. The arabesque pierced cresting along the edge of the roof between this cornice and the tower is similar to that on the roof of the Casa...
