Y., and the sulphur springs of Virginia, often contain sulphuretted hydrogen, though rarely in a proportion exceeding 1-J per cent. of their volume; and the gas in solution in this small quantity, when taken into the stomach, acts as a valuable medicinal remedy for various diseases. Hydrosulphuric acid, though a feeble acid, combines readily with bases to form sulphides, or sulphurets. Thus, if we place a drop of sulphuretted hydrogen water upon a bright silver or copper coin, or upon a piece of lead, a black spot will be quickly produced, owing to the formation of a black compound of the metal and sulphur (a sulphide). The black sulphide of lead formed when hydrosulphuric acid is brought in contact with the salts of lead, is particularly noticeable, and may be exhibited by exposing a piece of paper moistened with acetate of lead to air impregnated with this gas. This test is so delicate, that 1 part of sulphuretted hydrogen in 20,000 of air is said to Questions.--What is said of the solubility of this gas? What of its natural formation and proportional composition? What is said of its presence in mineral springs? What of its combinations with the metals? be sufficient to occasion a blackening of the paper. For the same reason, surfaces covered with lead paints, in the vicinity of sewers, cesspools, or the bilge-water of vessels, etc., scon become discolored. Sulphur unites...
